White in 1904 to Rescue Actress from Pittsburg Millionaire.

"I'M DREADFULLY AFRAID," SHE DECLARED IN PARIS

Important Witness Found by Detective Bergoff Asserts that Breach of Promise Suit Was Actually Begun-White the Young Woman's Protector.

In exclusively publishing the story of Anna Crane, the newest and the strongest witness in the Thaw case, The Evening World to-day furnishes the most amazing contribution to the story of the murder of Stanford White that has been put into type. For the first time the woman, who knows well of the relations existing between Harry Thaw and Evelyn Nesbit before their marriage than any living person, makes a full, free statement-a statement that is as astounding as it was unexpected.

Anna Crane, who went to Europe at Stanford White's behest to bring Evelyn Nesbit home after the chorus girl had fallen into Harry Thaw's hands, paints a picture of almost incredible conditions. She says that the trial of Harry Thaw it will, so skilled lawyers say, do more than any other thing to send him to the electric chair, unless he abandons his plea of justification and seeks refoge in a plea of lusanity, Story Told by Anna Crane.

This is the extraordinary story of Miss Anna Crane, the masseuse, sent by Stanford White to Paris in the summer of 1904 to bring Evelyn Nesbit back to this country with funds supplied by him. She has told the story to Assistant District-Attorney Robert J. Turnbull and her testimony will be most important if Thaw is placed on trial for his life.

Miss Crane was located only after weeks of clever detective work by HOPES TO KNOCK P. L. Bergoff, the private detective, now attached to the District-Attorney's office, whose defense of Stanford White, printed exclusively in The Evening World, was the turning point in the most absorbing murder case of Miss Crane is fifty years old, with gray hair and frank features. She occupies a modest apartment in the Thirties, where she was visited to-day by a reporter for The Evening World.

This old-school masseuse was the mysterious woman who yesterday visited the Criminal Courts Building, and was closeted with Mr. Turnbuil for three hours.

Miss Crane's story is as follows:

"I have known Evelyn Nesbit ever since she went on the stage. I met the poor young woman when she was playing in 'The Wild Rose' the Rev. A. S. Gregg, field secretary company, and was living with her mother at the Hotel Wellington. It was through Mrs. Neebit and her daughter that I became acquainted paign against the betting evil. Mr. Greeg said that his time in New York will be taken up with the selection and training of speakers. He is confident that once the people understand the situation they will bring pressure to bear that will insure the passage at the next Legislature of a bill making race-track gambling a felony.

He also purposes to secure the passage of a bill appropriating $250,000 for county fairs. This will be a substitute for the five percent, tax now levied on racing associations as a subsidy for the fairs. He said that persons interested in the fairs and anxious for the continuance of the subsidy were instrumental in blocking the Cassidy-Lansing anti-gambling bill. fifty to one hundread speakers to spread
